THE DAILY CAPITAL JOURNAL
SATURDAY, JULY 1, 1882.
CELEBRATION.

They have not taken part so fully as they are entitled by their intelligence, morality and勇敢 character. While Great Britain shows a great green and a noble aspect, America's honor would be well as we often say.

OLD ENGLISH COAST SCENES.

There was once a time when our forefathers did not do a very good job in maintaining their property. There were those who found fault with education itself. Picture of a man who believed that if he had been consulted about the universe he would have arranged things differently. "I would have hung the big wagons on the tall masts of the forest, and the tiny ones would grow on the rising rise that creeps along the ground." And then a wind blew across a series of a tall trees and struck the man in the nose. As he held his bleeding nostril his first exclamation was: "Thank God it was not a gunpowder."

The speaker believed we could not improve much on the foundation principles of our government, but we had departed vastly from those principles. While our forefathers dealt with a foreign foe, we had ourselves to deal with. We must take a square look at ourselves and fearlessly examine the tendencies that were sweeping us on to development, greatness and victory, or destruction.

THE POLITICAL EDUCATION BOOK.

When the Anglo-Saxons became Christians there was produced the mighty cross-force that had founded British and American political institutions. They swept across the new world to the Pacific, and would yet possess the minds of the sea and transmit the important affairs of the Atlantic continent. The Mongolians could no more locate our country against this westward sweep of civilization than could Mr. Parsonage keep back the tides of the ocean within her bosom. The revolution and the stern nature of the New England soil had produced a race of heroes and patriots. We had carried on a great war for the union and peoples the great west. Here would spring the typical American race by the intermarriage of the native American stock from New England and the swarming of the first generation of the strongest immigrant race that had come from Europe. The region between the Rockies and the Pacific was destined to produce the ideal American race of the future.

WORKERS APPRENTICE.

The speaker referred to three foreign incidents: The Transvaal invasion, the Turkey-Grecian war and the Spanish-Cuban war. The resolution of recognition for the Cuban as being made had passed the senate and if Mr. Reed would take his hand off the house it would pass that body. If the government would take his hand off the people, our country would land 100,000 volunteers in Cuba inside of sixty days and drive the last Spaniard out of the West Indies. International law and a policy of non-intervention no doubt required our government to hold back, but the requirements of humanity were a higher law. In the world's great balance sheet of justice a black line would be drawn through our account. There was no sugar trust to hold back France when she allowed her brave blood to intercede in behalf of the American colonies. There is no sugar trust to prevent our acquiring the territory of Alaska, though British dominions lay between and international law and American traditions were interposed. No people can do as much as the American people when they wish to act.

EDUCATION OF THE MANNER.

He advocated the education of the masses through better public schools and better public roads. The school house should be redeemed from being commons for the cattle to run upon its grounds. It should be enclosed and beautified without and within, the houses should be open and the religious influence extended to every child over eight years old. The mother should find time to go to any day in the year. It should become the center for the education of daily life and help up all the wheat and oats in the state or nation and not overtake a dollar a barrel extra on all the flour we eat. What a glorious field for their operation! Seven millions of people are rapidly increasing. They carry on people's government. The students ought to come and return to all the necessities of the people. The big wagons may come to our rescue. It may put the price of big wagons so high very few people can use them. The American wives will rebellion refuse to have children if they have to carry such stores. That will be a check on population and prevent the malignant getting possession of the earth and all the people gone to hell. But they are already our task-masters. Like the Pharaoh of Egypt, they command the millions to roll for them and even seize granaries of wealth. One of these days will come a Moses and lead the people out of bondage. The government is a structure that endures the months of time. Its designs crumble into dust, but the slaves who served its gods towards heaven and made them without show, became the chosen race and transmitters of intelligence to the ages. The down-trodden advertising masses of our country would yet become the heralds of liberty for the elevation and salvation of humanity.

THE EDUCATIONAL INFLUENCE OF TRADE could not be overestimated. But trade generalized the individual and the community as much as filling wells did those who lived by them. The lower animals to our farmers from bad trade was placed by competent authorities as amounting to $2 per acre on the value of all improved farm land. This was a low estimate but reached the real figure of $2,000 a year. How many miles of good road would one build, or half of? How much of wealth, comfort and civilization would it add to every community? How much it would stimulate prosperity and cruelty to animals? How much it would impede the attendance at church and school? How much it would add to the stability of the community? If the cycle hastened the advent of better roads, all hail to that invention. But did it not rather teach the people to do without roads and build cycle paths? Until we could get better laws and better systems for building roads it was each citizen's duty to improve the roads along his own premises and keep them in passable condition. The man who never turned out voluntarily and mendeth his own ways is hardly a good enough Christian to get to heaven or deserve to enjoy the benefits of civilization.

PASSIONARY TRENDS.

The speaker mentioned as predominating tendencies of the times, ambition and ambition, some good and some bad. If the soul could be torn off the average man it would be found that he was studying how to hand his name down to posterity. This was true from the boy cutting his name in the bark of a tree, to the New York four-handed writing their names on the paper lining to the bonnie doors of the Grand monument. A few years' growth would obliterate the boy's carving and the scribbling of the aristocrats would be eaten by the moths. Broad-hand charity was a national sin. It was better to give a cup of water to a beggar by the roadside than to endow a college in the hope of getting a seat near the throne. The tendency was to make this the age of the millionaire. In 1776 the child's question about a patriot was: "Father, was he a patriot?" In 1860 it was: "Father, was he for the Union?" Today the boy asks: "Father, is that man a millionaire?"

CENTRALIZATION.

The most pronounced tendency of the age was centralization of wealth and power. We have Mr. Reed in congress, one-man-power running our national campaigns, one man holding up a legislature in Oregon. One man controlled the manufacture and output of illuminating oils. But for Rockefeller, competent authorities say our coal oil need cost us but half what we pay. But he is a religious man. He uses his millions in founding religious institutions of learning. The Baptists threaten to refuse his money in the future. But he will join some denomination that will take his money. The breweries and distilleries are all to be gathered under one syndicate and will ultimately pass under the management of one man. What if he should get genuine religion and decide to quit the whole business and cut off the world's supply of liquors? But syndicates don't get

MEXICAN "GREASERS."

The party of Mexican "greasers" who passed through Salem several weeks since for Portland came through our city again last evening on the return trip. They are bound for Eugene where they expect to make connections with the second division of their company. The company passing through Salem last evening consisted of seven wagon loads numbering in all about thirty persons. They were about as filthy a set as one sees. They responded to an invitation to "move on" by Salem's policemen and did not stop in our city.

MISS LIMA BAKER.

Miss Lima Baker returned from Will City, Tuesday where she has been visiting friends.

Dr. Wells of Silverton is staying at L. L. Berry's for a few days.

Quite a party of Salem people joined for Mr. Jefferson, passed through the place Tuesday evening.

Miss Anna George, returned to her home at Eugene Saturday last.

I understand that the latest exchange at Detroit will give a chance on the 18th.

A. H. Barlow, returned from the valley last Sunday with a horse that weighs over seven hundred pounds.

Moses Barlow and Sonnie, are working early and late to fill some important orders.

June 28th was the hottest day of the season in the mountains.
